Benjamin Gluck's Defense in Substance Abuse Detox Facility Case Featured in LA Times

Bird Marella principal Benjamin Gluck's defense of a substance abuse detox center has been featured in the LA Times.

The facility, A Better Tomorrow, and four of its employees are currently facing second-degree murder charges in connection with a resident death in 2010.

The matter has sent shock waves through California's ever-growing drug and alcohol rehabilitation industry, as it is the first time in California history that a substance abuse treatment center has been accused of murder.
